Now these days there are so many methods to develop & learn new skills as well as to gain knowledge theoretical from various sources like podcasts, YouTube sessions and much more. But academic conference still steal the show. Academic conferences give valuable opportunities to delegates to learn cutting edge research, meeting new people from every walk of life and building strong professional relationship with others of our same field.

During COVID 19 there was halt to such in person gathering of conferences and shifted such academic conference on online mode/virtual conference. Benefits of virtual conference were that they were more accessible to a larger audience and high cost of travelling was even saved. Delegates were able to attend such conferences setting at the comfort from their homes. So in such virtual conference the attendance of delegates were quiet high. Then after at the verge of reducing the risk of COVID 19 world resumed to in person conferences but with lower member of expected response from speakers and delegates. Due to the same reason & cutting on high cost of coordinating events leads to growing popularity of organizing academic conference on hybrid-mode which was good blend of in person gathering & digital format.

But attending conference by delegates are always beneficial on any now these days whether physical, virtual or hybrid. Like delegates can showcase their research work to their colleagues or with their fellow people of same ground. It's not only presenting attending such academic conference strengthen our presentation skills. Another great reason to attend such conferences is to share knowledge which can broaden our horizons. A prestigious academic conference allows us to make our research more deeper which undergoes vigorous debate and review and let us know weak spots of our research. An academic conference brings together a diverse group of people from various sectors. Even there are various leading academic conferences in which they offer publication opportunities in various indexed international journals.

Last but not least-attending an academic conference is a great opportunity to combine conference and visiting new place which in consequence gain knowledge, engage with our fellow peers, and contribute to the development of the field.
